James Speyer, the banker, called yesterday on Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, who is here at the Ritz-Carlton.

When asked about the visit the German Ambassador said it really had no bearing whatever on the war. "You know, Mr. Speyer is a personal friend of mine, and he merely called to have a friendly chat," he said.

Mr. Speyer was asked if his visit might have something to do with a possible negotiation for a war loan. He replied it had nothing whatever to do with it. Concerning the reported efforts already made to open negotiations for peace, Mr. Speyer said:

"England is the enemy of peace, and we will not have peace until a decisive battle is fought. I really believe, however, that the war should be stopped. They have killed enough men already."
